Voluntary forest certification system and timber certification Electronic document management For the exchange of electronic documents, facsimile networks are increasingly being used, programs are being developed to exchange data between several programs or applications, or between several applications.Increasingly, new electronic documents are added from external sources related to various types of services and products. In this regard, companies producing wood products need to improve the system of work with business papers and comply with established requirements. You can read about it on our website in the Library section. Pages 11, 12. Manufacture of wood products Pages 13, 14. Export and import of wood products Pages 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20. Invoices Pages 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26. Certificates of services rendered Page 27. Deadlines Pages 28, 29, 30, 31, 32. Contracts Page 33 Page 34. Warranty Cards Page 37 Page 39. Production Report Pages 40 - 51. Instructions Pages 52 - 59. Control questions and answers. Instructions are documents necessary for the work of users of the system. They contain detailed information useful in carrying out various operations, but can also be used as reference material. The volume of instructions can be anything - from one to fifty sheets, which can contain any information. It all depends on what the instructions are for. For example, there are instructions, the completion of which is associated with entering any data into an electronic database, filling out forms, etc. Often there are instructions for working with a program in which there are various actions. Basically, such instructions are located at the user's workplace, but they also exist in the form of a file. The basic principle of working with the instruction is its clear and complete reading. It is best if the instruction is written in Russian. Also, instructions can be personalized handouts - â€œGoods for dispatchâ€ and coupons for them. In work manuals
