of Fifth Street and Fifteenth Street. In August 2007, a Rock Island Division of the Metropolitan Water Reclamation District of Greater Chicago placed a request for proposal for an integrated landfill liner to control erosion and protect the south side of the landfill from storm water runoff. In 2010, the Environmental Protection Agency awarded a $4 million grant to the Metropolitan Water Reclamation District of Greater Chicago to fund the remediation of the south side of the landfill. In May 2010, the Illinois EPA listed the landfill as the second most contaminated property in the state of Illinois, a title that was later taken away by the Illinois Department of Conservation in June 2012. However, in December 2012, the IDERCCA group placed the landfill's impact on the quality of the surrounding environment at number one, surpassing the Environmental Protection Agency's crown jewel, the DeKalb County Sanitary Landfill. DeKalb County had to change its designation from the number one site in Illinois to number two as a result of its legislation. The Illinois EPA and the Illinois Department of Environmental Protection, both working together, conducted a 3,500-foot ground-penetrating radar investigation that was conducted on the south side of the landfill. The data, which was gathered from inside the landfill and from on the surface of the ground, was able to identify the depth of contamination that was found and was able to provide a visual image of what the landfill's south side looked like, showing how far the contamination had spread. In November 2010, the DeKalb County Sanitary Landfill, Inc., announced that an agreement had been reached with the Illinois Environmental Protection Agency to repair the landfill so that it could meet its legal requirements and continue accepting waste. A final cleanup plan was put into place in April 2011. In May 2011, the Village of Glenwood Hills publicly announced that the Village was aware of the potential for medical waste to be buried in the landfill because the Village was responsible for the public health of its residents. It was also noted that the site was the subject of an investigation by the Illinois EPA. 09e8f5149f
