Vector graphics: Photoshop is a vector program. It can open and edit vector graphics. Adobe provides support for the Adobe Illustrator format. Color management: This capability lets you color-correct images that originated with CMYK (cyan, magenta, yellow, and black) printers. This color profile is sometimes referred to as the fourth color — the black color — and allows for four color values: 0% (black), 100% (white), and the individual values for each of the CMYK colors. Color Picker: This tool helps you select colors easily and quickly. Filters: Photoshop has filters, which allow you to alter images and make them appear different. These filters come in all sorts of categories. You can use filter effects to help create the feel of a particular artistic technique or to simply make your image more artistic, such as by applying the grunge filter. Lens blur: This tool lets you blur a portion of an image to help soften sharp features, such as the picture subject's nose and eyes. A blurred image can often make a person look less as if she's staring directly at the camera. Layer: You can create and use layers. These are places where you can place different layers — such as shadows, highlights, or different images that can be moved or rotated — and make changes without changing the original. Layer Masks: Photoshop has layers that can be modified or shared with other layers. You can mask an area of a layer to protect it from another layer's edits, or protect an area from editing by the user who owns the layer. Lights: Photoshop has a built-in light tool that enables you to adjust and position lights on a photo. Shape tools: This tool enables you to cut out shapes and modify them. With shapes, you can simply use the Rectangle or Ellipse tool to shape an area of an image; to create rounded corners or a border, you can use the Round or Diamond tools. Magic Wand: You can use the magic wand tool to select areas of an image. You can then select the areas you want to copy and paste to another area of the same image. Or you can select an area of an image by placing the magic wand over a portion of an image and clicking the left mouse button to select that

Kagerō In Japanese mythology, a Kagerō (𪛗𪛘 "heavenly beast") is a monstrous twin-tailed humanoid which lives in the sky or on mountaintops, and rages the high heavens. They also abduct humans in their stead, leading a good person to a gruesome death. In folklore, Kagerō are often associated with the heavens, especially the moon, and they are frequently depicted with its gigantic, red eye, which symbolizes its primeval character. Many Kagerō are mostly confined to the high mountains, and a good person is generally spared by them. Contents One of the most famous Kagerō is the deity Suikoden, who in the popular video game Suikoden and its sequels is often depicted in the sky with the red eye; due to a misjudged attack from Kouza, he falls to his death from the sky, and later is reborn as Sakuya. This Kagerō may be a reference to a similar disaster that occurred during the Edo period, when the moon was believed to have fallen from the sky, or in the aftermath of the Yahagi-no-Kami earthquake of 1793. On moonlit nights, the Kagerō is also thought to be the apparent cause of harvest failures and flocks of birds becoming unusually scarce. In a text of the Muromachi period, the [[Nihon Shoki|Shoku Nihongi]] mentions that if a ploughs up the dead body of a Kagerō, it will bring about a bumper crop. Similarly, when a plough strikes the corpse of a Kagerō in the fields, the plough turns over and springs a solid gold ploughshare from its belly. Kagerō may be a reference to demons sent by the mountain gods. For example, the god of Mount Tai is said to have sent one kagerō to pick a wife for the farmer Otsuki in the 1,000 Stories of Osaka. She grows to a size of 50,000m and devours them all, only being frightened off at the sight of the "Tail" red and yellow part of the moon. There is an old proverb which warns against transgressions to one's honor, especially to one's family. Those who violate this proverb are said to invite the Kagerō in their houses, who, for reasons of self-defense, will commit terrible crimes by either maiming or

This invention relates to a heat-sensitive heat transfer recording medium and more particularly to a heat-sensitive heat transfer recording medium suitable for the formation of a full-colored image for use as an information recording medium, e.g., a card, a tag, or the like, by using an electronic typewriter or a personal computer in the banking business, membership card, or the like. As a heat-sensitive heat transfer recording medium suitable for the formation of a full-colored image by using an electronic typewriter, there has heretofore been used, for example, a recording medium formed from a heat-transferable ink layer containing wax as a main component and a base film of an appropriate thickness provided thereon, as described in Japanese Laid-Open Patent Application (JP-A) 54-17934, or formed from a heat-transferable ink layer containing a wax and a coloring agent and a base film of an appropriate thickness provided thereon, as described in Japanese Laid-Open Patent Application (JP-A) 54-161546. There is a growing demand in recent years for a full-colored card or a tag which is low in cost and fine in image quality and which can be formed by the use of a heat-sensitive heat transfer recording medium from an electronic typewriter or a personal computer. However, the above-mentioned conventional recording mediums have problems of low image quality, particularly low resolution, low gradation and substantial image voids due to the use of wax as a main component. Further, when the card or tag is to be formed by the use of the above-mentioned recording mediums, an additional process of applying a coat of toner is required, which poses problems of inefficiency in manufacturing the card or tag and the use of a large quantity of waste paper for the purpose of application of the coat of toner. The heat-sensitive heat transfer recording medium for the formation of a full-colored image, in which ink ribbons containing coloring agents are used to be formed on a substrate which is preferably a plastic film in view of low thermal capacity, low heat conductivity, and the like. A card or tag is formed by transferring the ink ribbon on the plastic film to a reception sheet, i.e., a card or tag base paper. An ink ribbon of this type has a substantially thermosensitive coloring agent layer and a heat-insulating layer laminated on an ink carrier layer formed from a resin. As a thermosensitive
