Gameplay is the crux of the story in Sherlock Holmes. The detective is expert at more than just putting two and two together, he can investigate and solve problems, using items found, his brain and deductions. As far as story telling, this game could not be much better than it is. If you have a compulsion to know what happens next, and you are okay with not knowing everything you need to know to get there, you'll find The Testament of Sherlock Holmes to be a great adventure.

GameplayThe game follows the classic interface of any of the incarnations of Holmes. You have an inventory of items you can use, your case file to record clues you find and your card board board with paper/slate/pencilled in clues. You can use your brain to do a quick inventory of what items you have, how to use them, and what you need to find next. This game is highly tactical, as you have to find the clues, make the deductions and take the appropriate action to complete the case. If you are looking for something to beat, this will be at the top of your list. The production values and attention to detail is amazing. In fact, this may be the first time I have ever gone back to a game after a long break and found myself in awe at what happened. This is a new Sherlock Holmes and probably one of the best graphics I have seen. The characters look sharp and the locations that you travel through are very detailed. If you want to be reminded of Sherlock, you can't miss this one. Gameplay The core of the gameplay revolves around solving clues and deciphering puzzles. In fact, there is a basic puzzle genre that you play through as the game progresses. There are certain types of boxes, ropes, keys, locks, etc that Holmes has to open or use in order to progress in the game. You play on a board of boxes, doors, windows, etc and using your brain you have to deduce which one is the box, which one is the window and so on. If you find yourself a little stuck, you can access the menu and look at your notes, the inventory of items you have or take a guess. It takes a lot of deduction to solve the cases and you will use everything you have to make sure you get it right. The best part of the game is being able to see the whole game through one of your very own sets of eyes
