All rights reserved. The present invention relates generally to an improved food extruder and more particularly to an improved food extruder capable of combining motor power and variable speed control. The use of food extruders such as those used to prepare or extrude candy, pie crusts, and the like is well known. These food extruders typically provide variable speeds such as at regular intervals to allow a candy maker to extrude and cut pieces of candy. In such food extruders, a motor is typically used to drive the extruder screw. The drive shaft of the motor may be connected to the extruder screw via a worm gear assembly. The speed of the motor is typically controlled by an interface mechanism that directs the motor's drive shaft to the extruder screw. The speed of the extruder screw may be adjusted to thus vary the volume of the candy being extruded. Typically, a motor is supplied with current at one or more speeds. It is desirable to have the ability to vary the speed of the motor quickly and easily. Thus, the typical interface mechanism for the food extruder may be adjusted only at a low
